ALL EYES ON POPE

After a state grand jury said the Vatican was complicit in concealing sexual abuse by the clergy, an archbishop says the pope himself should resign. 4-5

5 THINGS TO KNOW

WELCOME TO METRO PHILLY

SAM NEWHOUSE, REPORTER

Pope Francis has been almost universally beloved since he was elected in 2013. But with more ugly revelations about rampant child sexual abuse within the Catholic church in Pa. recently unveiled, although the pope has apologized profusely and recently visited Ireland, where he apologized for sex abuse there, some are saying he must do more. In a recent letter, a former nuncio to the U.S. says the pope covered up abuse by one archbishop and should resign. Read more inside and on metrophilly.us.

1 TRUMP ACCUSES GOOGLE OF BIAS, WH PROBES

President Donald Trump on Tuesday accused Google's search engine of promoting negative news articles and hiding "fair media" coverage of him, vowing to address the situation without providing evidence or giving details of action he might take. Trump's attack against the Alphabet Inc. unit follows a string of grievances against technology companies, including social media's Twitter Inc. and Facebook Inc., which he has accused of silencing conservative voices, and Amazon.com Inc, which he has said is hurting small businesses and benefiting from a favorable deal with the U.S. Postal Service. He frequently berates news outlets for what he perceives as unfair coverage. Google denied any political bias, saying in a statement that its search engine is "not used to set a political agenda and we don't bias our results toward any political ideology." Trump said in several tweets on Tuesday that Google search results for "Trump News" were "rigged" against him because they showed only coverage from outlets like CNN and not conservative publications, suggesting the practice was illegal.

2 TEXAS COP GUILTY OF MURDERING BLACK TEEN

A Texas jury on Tuesday found a white former policeman guilty of murder for fatally shooting a black teenager in a car moving away from him in a 2017 case in a Dallas suburb that fueled a national debate over possible racial bias in U.S. policing. The police officer, Roy Oliver, 38, was fired by the Balch Springs Police Department for violating department policy a few days after he fatally shot Jordan Edwards, 15, a standout high school student and athlete. Edwards was shot in the head. The conviction was a rare instance in which an officer was found guilty of murdering an unarmed person. Oliver faces up to life in prison; sentencing will come later. Oliver, along with another officer, had responded to reports of underage drinking at a house party in the predominantly black and Hispanic city of Balch Springs, about 15 miles southeast of Dallas. Oliver fired his rifle several times into a car with several other teens inside, prosecutors said. The jury deliberated for about 12 hours over two days before reaching its verdict, following a trial that started in mid-August.

4 PUERTO RICO DEATH TOLL FROM MARIA NEARLY 3,000

The official death toll on Puerto Rico from Hurricane Maria, the most powerful storm to strike the Caribbean island in almost a century, was raised on Tuesday from just 64 to nearly 3,000, based on a study ordered by the governor of the U.S. territory. The report found that an estimated 2,975 deaths could be attributed directly or indirectly to Maria from the time it struck in September 2017 to mid-February of this year. The figure was derived from comparisons between predicted mortality under normal circumstances and deaths documented after the storm. The emergency response to Maria became highly politicized as the Trump administration was criticized as being slow to recognize the gravity of the devastation and too sluggish in providing disaster relief to Puerto Rico, an island of more than three million residents. The study, conducted by George Washington University's Milken Institute School of Public Health and released Tuesday, also found that the risk of death from the hurricane was substantially higher for poor people and elderly men.

5 CALIF. FIRST STATE TO SCRAP CASH BAIL SYSTEM

California will become the first U.S. state to eliminate the cash bail system for people awaiting criminal trial, under a reform bill signed on Tuesday by Gov. Jerry Brown that will take effect in October 2019. "Today, California reforms its bail system so that rich and poor alike are treated fairly," Brown, a Democrat, said in a statement. The law will allow for defendants to be released after being arrested if they are deemed likely to appear for court hearings and pose little danger to the public. Judges would be allowed to rule out release for people accused of felony acts of violence, misdemeanor domestic violence, sexual assault, making threats and certain other crimes. Civil liberties and human rights groups have long called for reforming the bail system, which has its roots in medieval England, but some of them opposed the California bill. "It cannot guarantee a substantial reduction in the number of Californians detained while awaiting trial, nor does it sufficiently address racial bias in pretrial decision making," leaders of three American Civil Liberties Union chapters in California said in a joint statement.

Heat wave leads to early closures at Philly schools

Opening week will be interrupted by early closings.

SAM NEWHOUSE
sam.newhouse@metro.us

Philly is feeling the heat. CHARLES MOSTOLLER

A heat wave hitting Philadelphia closed public schools early on Tuesday and canceled Wednesday's classes.

The School District of Philadelphia announced the heat-related closings on Monday.

"Due to the high temperatures forecasted, all School District of Philadelphia schools will dismiss students at 1 p.m. on Tuesday, Aug. 28 and Wednesday, Aug. 29," the School District announced. "School-based employees are expected to work their normal work day and administrative offices will operate on regular business hours. All after-school activities including all athletic programs and professional development sessions scheduled for Tuesday and Wednesday are canceled."

The National Weather Service (NWS) issued a heat advisory for the Philadelphia region, saying temperatures would feel as hot as 100 to 104 degrees at some points due to humidity and heat.

Around 10:30 a.m. Tuesday, NWS issued an advisory warning of a heat index "up to 103 degrees due to afternoon temperatures in the lower 90s."

"The heat and humidity may cause heat stress during outdoor exertion or extended exposure," NWS said. "Limit or reschedule strenuous outdoor activities. Find shade and stay hydrated. Check up on the elderly, sick and those without air conditioning. Never leave kids or pets unattended."

The School District moved its opening date up a week this year to Aug. 27, the week before Labor Day, in part to get one full week of school before the month of September, which is dotted with religious holidays.

They also wanted to frontload academic time into the schedule before standardized testing comes along later in the year.

Some 40 percent of Philly public schools don't have air conditioning systems. But since the School District's climate analysis found that the last week of August and first week of September are typically roughly equal in temperature, the early opening wouldn't affect students.

HEAT INDEX UP TO
Due to afternoon temperatures in the lower 90s.

Unfortunately, it appears Mother Nature chose to disprove that theory, at least for this year.

The School District urged parents to check back for updates at philasd.org; on the District's Facebook page at facebook.com/PhillySchools and their Twitter feed, @PHLschools; or to call the District's Information Hotline at 215-400-INFO (4636) for further details.

Pope Francis, Vatican covered up sex abuse in church, former archbishop says

The former US ambassador from the Vatican has accused Pope Francis of participating in the cover-up of the Catholic sex abuse scandal.

sam.newhouse@metro.us

The fallout from the Pennsylvania grand jury report documenting decades of sexual abuse within the Catholic church continues as critics are now blaming the Vatican and even beloved Pope Francis for possibly participating in covering up the sexual abuse of children by members of the clergy.

On Tuesday, Pennsylvania Attorney General Josh Shapiro doubled down on his claims that the Vatican was aware of the sex abuse going on in Pennsylvania and participated in the cover-up.

"They [the grand jury] found that not only was there widespread sexual abuse, rape of children, but they found that there was a systematic cover-up that went all the way to the Vatican," Shapiro said on Tuesday on NBC's "Today" morning talk show. "What was so profoundly horrifying about this was Church leaders would lie to parishioners on Sunday, they would lie to the public, they would shield these predators from law enforcement, but then they would document all of it and place it in in the secret archives."

Shapiro, as he previously asserted at the time of the grand jury report's release, asserted that clergy members and Vatican officials knowingly shielded priests from the eyes of the law by covering up the abuse and moving predator priests to different assignments.

Shapiro added that in two weeks, his office has received 733 calls to its special clergy abuse hotline.

But he stopped short of directly accusing Pope Francis, who was elected in 2013, and replaced Pope Benedict XVI, the first pope to resign from the office in six centuries. Pope Francis has apologized extensively for the abuse and ensuing cover-up.

"We have evidence that the Vatican had knowledge of the cover-up — I can't specifically speak to Pope Francis," Shapiro said.

However, the pope has come under scrutiny, with a fellow church leader saying the Holy Father was indeed complicit with the cover-up of some sexual abuse in the Church.

Meanwhile, Archbishop Carlo Maria Viganò, 77, has accused Pope Francis of knowing about sex abuse by a former U.S. archbishop and demanded he resign.

"Francis is abdicating the mandate which Christ gave to Peter to confirm the brethren," Viganò wrote in an 11-page letter, in which he accused Francis of knowingly repealing sanctions set against former Washington, D.C. Archbishop Theodore McCarrick, who allegedly sexually abused seminarians and young priests.

"Pope Francis must be the first to set a good example for cardinals and bishops who covered up McCarrick's abuses and resign along with all of them," Viganò wrote.

"Read the document carefully and judge it for yourselves."
Pope Francis

Francis, who was confronted with these accusations after visiting Ireland to apologize for the sex abuse scandals that have erupted there, said he would not comment on the letter.

"Read the document carefully and judge it for yourselves," Pope Francis said. "I will not say one word on this. I think the statement speaks for itself, and you have sufficient journalistic capacity to reach your own conclusions."

Viganò's credibility has been questioned, with some critics noting he holds homophobic stances. He lost his position in 2016 after arranging the pope's 2016 trip to the U.S., which included a mass in Philadelphia, but more controversially, included a visit with a Kentucky court clerk who had refused to acknowledge gay marriages. It remains unclear if his claims will be proven or if they merely symbolize an unresolved feud among church leadership.

Would the resignation of Pope Francis divide the Church?

Metro spoke with James T. Bretzke, professor of moral theology at Marquette University.

Q: Is it a bold move to ask Pope Francis to step down?
The former Ambassador of the Holy See, Viganò, came forward with grave accusations. Given the fact that Vatican diplomats have sworn to silence, it is a bold move to ask the pope to resign. Since there is a battle in the Church going on — between the conservative branch of Viganò and the liberal branch, which adheres to the pope — Viganò's claims need some additional proof.

Q: What happens if Pope Francis resigns?
Well Pope Francis is past 80 and has a number of health problems, so he could resign [or die] due to these as well as the constant resistance from the ultra-conservatives in the Church. If he were to resign, then the same thing would happen as when Pope Benedict XVI resigned in February 2013: The "chair of Peter" would be declared "vacant" and then those cardinals under the age of 80 would gather in Rome and elect a new pope.

Q: What to expect?
I suspect that more people will come forward, as cardinals Cupich and Joseph Tobin have already done, and call into question or refute some of the major conjectures and speculation of Archbishop Viganò. I would suspect that there will be an increasing backlash against Viganò and those who have supported him so far. I believe that Pope Francis is a man of great integrity and holiness, and I think most people will see this.

Expect traffic delays (as usual) during Labor Day travel

Before you hit the road, you might want to see this data from Drivemode.

NIKKI M. MASCALI
nikki.mascali@metro.us

Labor Day is nigh, which means that you may be hitting the road to squeeze in one more ounce of fun before summer unofficially comes to a close this weekend.

As millions of other Americans are expected to be traveling alongside you, there's a very good chance your Labor Day weekend will begin with a lot of traffic and gridlock as you head to your destination.

Those looking to leave Philadelphia on Thursday for Labor Day weekend could see slow travel times between 2-3 p.m., while 6-7 a.m. is the slowest time on Friday.

"We can see that drivers in different cities experiment with different times to leave, often coalescing around surprising times."

Yo Koga, Drivemode CEO and founder

But with a little proper prior planning — and some data from safe-driving Android app Drivemode — you may be able to travel unscathed. In a new study, Drivemode analyzed driving conditions in 19 big cities across the country to find out which hours on the Thursday and Friday before Labor Day might have the slowest travel times.

The app looked at driving trends of more than 756,000 users ahead of this year's Memorial Day weekend and compared the number of minutes it took average drivers to travel one mile, hour by hour, on the Thursday and Friday before the holiday.

Before you hit the road for your last summer hurrah this Labor Day weekend, you might want to check when the best time to leave is. PIXABAY

"Drivers are always trying to beat traffic, and before a holiday weekend, they are often more motivated to spend the least amount of time on the road as possible," said Yo Koga, Drivemode CEO and founder. "We can see that drivers in different cities experiment with different times to leave, often coalescing around surprising times. Whether it's because of day shifts ending or flexible holiday office hours, each city reveals its own unique trends for trying to beat traffic."

If you plan to travel on Thursday, you might not find a wide-open road. Drivemode found that the day's slowest traffic was worse than Friday's in Boston, Chicago, Denver, Houston, Los Angeles, Miami, Minneapolis, Phoenix, San Francisco, St. Louis, Tampa and Washington, D.C.

R-E-S-P-E-C-T: Fans pay their last to Aretha Franklin

Fans gather to view the body of music legend Aretha Franklin. GETTY IMAGES

Aretha Franklin's body lay in repose on Tuesday while her soaring voice poured out from loudspeakers outside a Detroit museum, stirring fans to sway and sing along and others to weep as they lined up for a last glimpse of the Queen of Soul.

Franklin died last week at the age of 76 from pancreatic cancer in Detroit, where she began her career as a child singing gospel in the New Bethel Baptist Church choir.

Her powerful voice, seared with emotion, would become the daunting standard for other singers to match, but fans described a legacy beyond her most famous recordings.

"Aretha made a lot of women look at themselves differently, and changed how a lot of men looked at women," Alma Riley, 67, said after waiting in line outside the Charles H. Wright Museum of African American History for nearly three hours. "That is particularly important today, when we see such a lack of respect."

Franklin's body was displayed in an open, gold-plated casket that glowed beneath the grand rotunda's glass dome ceiling. There were clouds of pink flowers. Her sequined dress, pointed heels, lipstick and earrings were all a matching ruby red. The museum had erected a banner: "Forever Our Queen."

"She was a symbol for us," Ann Fortson, 63, said after emerging from the rotunda. The retired teacher had driven seven hours from Charleston, W.Va., with two friends the previous day. "There was no way we'd miss paying our respects."

The preacher's daughter first topped the charts in 1967 with "Respect," her no-nonsense reworking of a modest hit for Otis Redding into an enduring anthem for feminism and the civil rights movement.

Chaka Khan, Jennifer Hudson, Ronald Isley and Stevie Wonder, among others, are due to sing at her funeral on Friday at Detroit's Greater Grace Temple. Former President Bill Clinton, who invited Franklin to sing at his 1993 inauguration celebrations, will be among the speakers.

For some of those coping with grief at Tuesday's visitation, Franklin's songs, booming out of loudspeakers, were the cure: "Rock steady, baby," sang the familiar voice. "Just move your hips with a feeling from side to side." Some in the crowd could not help themselves but do just that. REUTERS

My grumble is when Septa Market/Frankford el announce the wrong stops. I am on my phone not looking at the stops but listening to the announcer on the el saying the stop — not realizing it is saying the wrong stops. It was saying two stops after the regular stop. My Grumble: Once a crowded regional rail train empties after a few stops, and the person in the aisle seat of a two-seater still doesn't move to another empty row or empty two-seater. On my commute home, I am one of the first stops to board and the last stop to get off. So I am usually sitting at a two-seater window seat. "Ozark" returns for season two on Netflix this week. ALL PHOTOS JESSICA MIGLIO/NETFLIX

In the first season of the Jason Bateman and Laura Linney-led Netflix crime drama "Ozark," the name "Cade Langmore" was whispered by locals who were fearful that the jail-bound devil might come from behind a tree or trailer and snatch them away.

In season two, which will be available for fans to binge on the streaming service beginning this Friday, the head of the Langmore family finds himself no longer confined by prison bars, which means the Byrde family's criminal escapades are now his to manipulate, if not wholly disrupt. Trevor Long, who plays the feared father of Julia Garner's Ruth, a local ally to Marty (Bateman) and Wendy's (Linney) various enterprises, now has a lot more to do in the would-be heir to "Breaking Bad."

This means long hours spent portraying a particularly dark character in an even darker show. To get past the series' somber tone, however, Long admits he sought solace in the comedy of Larry David to lighten the mood for himself and his fellow actors.

"I want to be in it as much as I can when I'm preparing to just put myself in," he explains. "When the camera's rolling, I put myself in it, but when the camera's off, we like to have fun and bust around and tell jokes. Charlie [Tahan] and Julia even got me hooked on 'Curb Your Enthusiasm' with Larry David. I'd never watched it before, but I was like, 'Oh my God!' That was my release. I'd watch Larry David every night after shooting because you want to be as light as possible. I mean, you have to have that mix."

Yet for all the inherent darkness that "Ozark" sees in its characters, Cade among them, Long argues that the show's particular strain of humor shines just a brightly, especially when the occasion calls for it.

"There's definitely some humor with Cade," he says. "You got a glimpse of it in the prison, and it's a little dark, but he's definitely got a sense of humor. You find a lightness when and where you can. When those moments come, I really, really try to find them and let them in. That sense of humor, and busting around with his nephews and his daughter. ... That was important."

Trevor Long

It's especially important to Cade and Ruth's strained relationship, which has already been tested by the latter's allegiance with the Byrde family in season one. Now that Cade is out, he must contend not only with the region's criminal newcomers, but with his own flesh and blood. Luckily for "Ozark" and for fans of the show, Long and Garner's work together on screen helps bring this dynamic to life with ease.

"Working with her was such fun and great experience," says Long. "She's obviously a very talented young actress. She just was full on every time and made me very comfortable in the scene. I saw what I was dealing with, and it made me excited to get in there with her. She was just so professional and prepared."

Asked if the task of doing even more as the previously whispered-about Cade was a daunting task, especially now that he was being paired off with (or against) Garner, Bateman and Linney, however, Long doesn't seem worried.

"I was pretty psyched going into season two, to have daddy and daughter wreak some havoc in the Ozarks," he laughs. "I was really excited, but yeah, it was definitely daunting. But I didn't try to think about it too much. I was pumped."

"Ozark" season two premieres Friday, Aug. 31 on Netflix.

No quiet in the studio for Chip Chantry

One of Philly's favorite sons is recording a new live album of stand-up at Helium.

A.D. AMOROSI
letters@metro.us

Chip Chantry records his new record at Helium tonight. GETTY IMAGES

Chip Chantry may be, in most people's eyes, Philly's funniest comedian, with a handful of annual awards since 2012 stating such acclaim.

However, Chantry is also an Italian Market neighbor, a fellow local walking dogs and dodging traffic in the early hours and late at night. And with that, this fast interview could have been conducted with each of us yelling at the other from out of our windows during any busy rush hour morning.

"Which would have been perfectly acceptable in South Philly, right?" says Chantry. "No one would have even noticed that we were screaming at 6 a.m. Just another day of hollering in the neighborhood."

The reason for talking more quietly now, beyond neighborly pleasantries, is Chantry's newest endeavor: the live recording of his second stand-up comedy album on Wednesday, Aug. 29, at Helium Comedy Club at 8 p.m. When you go (and get there early), prepare to sit up front and laugh. Not only because you won't be able to help yourself Chantry's acerbic retinue of hard won obsessions and twisted takes on everyday existence have always made him smartly and snarkily hilarious, whether he's at Helium, Punch Line Philly or the Philly Improv Theater.

The secondary reason for laughing is that Chantry is doing this new hour-plus material and upcoming live album in one take. So what happens if people don't laugh?

"Ah, that's another of my nightmares: people walking into a room, my jokes told – jokes I put hard work into - then nothing," he says with a laugh. "Luckily, there is editing, but what you hear is what you get."

There's no doubt that, like his comedy album debut, 2012's "Across from the Adonis" (also recorded at Helium), Chantry's weird fresh stories and new-found feelings about death and decrepitude will delight. "I am a hypochondriac to begin with, and I am getting older, so the thought of dying just gets worse," says Chantry.

If his upcoming live comedy is anything like that of his heroes, listeners will be handsomely rewarded.

"I grew up, in terms of comedy albums, with my dad's old 8-tracks in his Chevy Malibu, stuff like all of the legendary George Carlin recordings," says Chantry of "FM & AM," "Class Clown," and "Occupation: Foole." As a grown-up stand-up, Chantry moved up and onwards to weirdly expansive storytellers with killer one-line, one-two punches such as Dave Attell and the late, great Mitch Hedberg. "Dave Attell's 'Insomniac' stuff is classic, off color humor, and Hedberg was just... unpredictable. I hope some of their magic rubbed off of me."

Why do we hate optimists?

Metro investigates why we don't want someone to be happy.

LUZ LANCHEROS
MWN

iSTOCK

"Every day I wake up and thank the universe for everything..." "Today I feel lucky and I appreciate being who I am."

Such messages are all over WhatsApp and Instagram attached to images of everyone from celebrities in front of mansions to your cousin in the suburbs. Positivity is everywhere: on social media, at your workplace, self-help books. That is perhaps why people have started to hate it.

Scientists have confirmed it. Pat Barclay and Aleta Pleasant of the University of Guelph in Canada reported that "too good" people are getting punished by others who don't buy it — the excess of optimism is not real.

"People hate all this, and it makes them frustrated because such messages are just too much. They seem one-sided and unrealistic. When people react to an 'attack' of positive messages, they are telling themselves that their life is not as ideal," says Jamie Gruman, researcher on positive organizational psychology and socialization. "Life is complex. It has happy parts and very hard ones too. Some days it is wonderful, and others it is terrible."

"The ideas that people have about positivism and negativism are witty. And it's part of our existence to experience both."

Jamie Gruman, researcher on positive organisational psychology and socialisation at the University of Guelph, Canada

What happens on social media can also be observed at work, with employees forced to participate in integration activities and read positive slogans over e-mail.

"Images of people who are happy and productive have a long history," Gruman adds. "However, workers face a challenge to maintain a positive attitude without any help from the work environment. That is where the company must take the responsibility to create it.

"In a place with job overload and people needed to be always available it becomes exhausting. Thus, 'you must have a positive attitude' slogans stop being fair or reasonable."

The experts say it is better to be positive than negative, but expectations should be tempered by acknowledging real life.

"The ideas people have about positivism and negativism are witty. And it's part of our existence to experience both," Gruman says.

After all, everything is a matter of balance: being happy is part of life, as well as being sad. And eliminating either of the two elements could be painful. Or at least make us see that only happiness does not really reflect our personalities.

Jose Bautista is now a member of the Philadelphia Phillies. GETTY IMAGES

Phillies acquire Bautista from Mets

It is the third trade the locals have made this month.

JOVAN ALFORD
jovan.alford@metro.us

The Phillies acquired veteran outfielder Jose Bautista in a trade with the New York Mets on Tuesday, according to Joel Sherman of the New York Post.

In exchange for the services of Bautista, Philadelphia is reportedly sending a player, to be named later, or cash to the Mets per Jim Salisbury of NBC Sports Philadelphia.

On Monday, Ken Rosenthal of the Athletic reported that the Phillies claimed Bautista on revocable trade waivers from the Mets, meaning that the two teams had 24 hours to complete a trade.

With Bautista now in the fold, this makes three trades that the Phillies have completed during the month of August in hopes of making a strong push towards the MLB postseason.

This season, the 37-year-old outfielder is struggling at the plate but will be a nice bat to have off the bench. In 342 plate appearances, Bautista is hitting .196/.339/.364 with 11 home runs and 42 RBI.

While his overall numbers are not impressive, the veteran slugger has played better over the last 14 games, hitting .213/.351/.362 with two home runs and 10 RBI. Not to mention, he also has an .OPS of .713, which should be a minor upgrade for the Phillies, who currently rank 23rd in the majors in .OPS with .715.

In addition to those things, the Phillies will be leaning on Bautista for the last month of the season as a power-hitting right-handed bat. Currently, first baseman Justin Bour is on the disabled list with an oblique strain.

The Phillies acquired Bour earlier this month from the Miami Marlins, in exchange for minor league pitcher McKenzie Mills. With Bour on the shelf, that should provide Bautista with a few pinch-hitting opportunities.

This season, with both the Atlanta Braves and Mets, the former Toronto Blue Jay is having formidable success against right-handed pitchers rather than lefties.

Against right-handed pitchers, Bautista is hitting .206/.329/.367 with seven home runs and 30 RBI. Even though he might not be the great home run hitter that he once was, Bautista can still change the outcome of a game with one swing of the bat.

During last month's non-waiver trade deadline, it was widely reported that the Phillies were looking to acquire a fourth outfielder with Aaron Altherr slumping and being demoted to Triple-A.

However, Philadelphia was not successful, as they could not get the likes of Joey Gallo, Curtis Granderson, Andrew McCutchen, or Adam Jones.

But maybe Bautista will be a better consolation prize for the stretch run. Only time will tell. If the Phillies are able to make the playoffs, then Joey Bats will be on the roster, which is a nice option to have.

Zach Bednarczyk returns for Villanova at quarterback. GETTY IMAGES

Rivalry renewed: Temple and Nova square off Saturday

The series between the two schools is tied at 16-16-2.

JON MARKS
letters@metro.us

They're not exactly the Sharks and Jets or the Hatfields and McCoys when it comes to neighborhood rivalries. But when Temple and Villanova square off at Lincoln Financial Field at noon on Saturday to open the 2018 regular season, there will be more than bragging rights at stake.

For Geoff Collins' Owls, who came on strong in his first season to finish 7-6 and win the Gasparilla Bowl, it's a chance to build on that momentum and pick up speed before they enter play in the tough American Athletic Conference.

However, for Mark Ferrante's Wildcats, who were wrecked by injuries in a 5-6 season, they get to show how their FCS program measures up against the big boys.

"I like that game because I know we'll get a good crowd and it's good for the city," said Ferrante, whose club hung with Temple all the way last year before Aaron Boumerhi's late 49-yard field goal won it for the Owls, 16-13.

"I learned that they're really big and physical," Ferrante said. "Geoff's got them going in a good direction. They have a lot of skill and a notch above the teams we have in our league. It's a great barometer to see where we're heading."

For Temple, too, the Wildcats offer a challenge on both offense and defense.

"They've got a lot of starters back on both sides of the ball," said Collins, who returns a batch of starters on both sides of the ball, including quarterback Frank Nutile, running back Ryquell Armstead, wide receiver Ventell Bryant and defensive backs Delvon Randall and Michael Dogbe.

"Their quarterback (Zach Bednarczyk) is very accurate and played really well against us and they have a good receiving corps with speed and length."

Collins gave a further explanation on what the Wildcats do very well, specifically on defense.

"Their offense causes problems for any defense. And their defense was good, especially against the run. They play really good, disciplined, sound fundamental football," he said. "Our guys understand how good they are since our game last year came down to the last minute."

That's one reason why the Wildcats feel confident they can not only hang with the Owls but also beat them on Saturday.

"We know we have to play our A-game for four quarters," said Bednarczyk, who's back healthy after blowing out his knee in the fifth game last season. "We didn't play that well the first half (trailing 10-0 at intermission), but we came back and showed we have a good enough team to win a game like that."

Furthermore, as cornerback Rob Rolle explained that just like Nova, the Owls put their pants on one leg at a time.

"They might have a bigger roster than us, but it's not like we're playing the Pittsburgh Steelers," said Rolle, who missed the final seven games with a knee injury of his own. "We carry ourselves just like they do into that game, with all the confidence in the world."

Not since 2009 has Villanova beaten the Owls, which was the start of a brief annual series played for the Mayor's Trophy.

The series, which became dormant from 1980-2003, was discontinued again after 2012, before resuming last season. But after Saturday, the teams aren't slated to meet until sometime in the 2020s.

56

The Temple football program has amassed 56 wins so far this decade, with a record of 56-45 since 2010.

By then it's likely everyone who plays in this one will be gone, which raises the stakes in 2018 with the series dead even, 16-16-2.

For the Division 1 Owls, who'll be bidding to go to a bowl game for the third straight season and fourth in the last five years, losing to an FCS team wouldn't look good on their résumé — even if it's someone from the neighborhood.

"Obviously, I have tremendous respect for their coaching staff and I've gotten to know them the past year," said Collins, whose club will take on Buffalo next week before heading to Maryland.

"Their guys play hard and they're very, very talented. Offensively, they're very dangerous because they run a complex scheme and their defense does a great job."

However, Collins is looking forward to having Nutile under center for this game, who didn't take over as the quarterback until midseason last year.

"I'm excited to see him play and lead our team and distribute the ball where it needs to go," said Collins. "I'm excited to see him out there with his guys against a really good opponent."

That respect is mutual as the neighborly 'Cats and Owls prepare to square off on Saturday. Forget the Jets and the Sharks; Temple and Villanova would have it no other way.
